ROYAL SCANDAL ABOUT GEORGE IV.
The New York Graphic, following up its article in relation to the mysterious book (reported by telegraph to have been discovered in Louisville, Ky.) for which a reward of $1,000 is offered, and which is said to contain an account of the marriage of George IV. to Mrs.
Fitz Herbert, and of the issue of that marriage, says:

"Maria Fitzherbert was born in July, 1756, of an old Catholic family of Hampshire, and was married successively to Edward Weld of Dorset and Thomas Fitzherbert of Stafford, being left a widow a second time in 1781. Four years afterwards George IV., the then Prince of Wales, and 'the first gentleman of Europe,' first saw her, and in December, 1785, they were privately married by a clergyman of the Established Church in the presence of witnesses.
This union was not legally valid, for the English law prohibits a marriage between a subject and a prince of the royal blood. The King subsequently married Queen Caroline, quarreling with her, and returned to Mrs. Fitzherbert.
His excesses compelled her to leave him, and she retired to Brighton, where she outlived both George IV. and his successor, receiving a large pension from the government. Such is the account given of her in 'The American Cyclopaedia' and in her 'Memoirs' by the Hon. Charles Langdale. (London, 1836) and the continuation of part of the mother's pension to the son is proof that the present government recognizes the validity of his claims as at least a son by a monogamous marriage.

"The case then stands thus: The marriage, though not legally valid, is well known to have been celebrated; the marriage has never been legally established, but should it now be legally established no harm could come from it. It follows that the lost book contains something more than has commonly been supposed, and something that it generally known would work very serious injury to somebody—some family or some interest that can afford to pay largely for its suppression. Taken in connection with the suppression of part of the 'Greville Memoirs,' at this time, with the publisher of the lost book and the general suspicion, it seems very evident that the royal family and interest have important matters here at stake.

"A story having been published in New York that the son of George IV. and Mrs. Fitzherbert had turned up in that city in the person of Thomas Baker, the composer, and leader of the orchestra at Wallack's Theatre, a reporter called on that gentleman and he disavowed the distinction in the following language: 'No, I am not the son of George IV., nor I am one of the last of the Hamiltons. It is owing to my descent from the Duke of Hamilton that I obtained a start in my profession—I was placed in the Royal Academy—and subsequent considerations from the British government. The Princess Augusta, aunt of the Queen, was my foster mother. I was brought up about the court. I have a case in chancery now, and am going over next summer to see about it. But I hope people won't think I am going over to lay claim to the succession. I am not the son of George IV.'

AN ITALIAN CITY.—Florence, notwithstanding the brightness of the picture which strikes the traveler when he first enters the town, is not a gay city; everything that is characteristic of the Italian mind is of a grave and serious nature. The houses, which rise out of the Arno, bright with soft tints of color, irregular, picturesque, various, with roofs at every possible elevation, the one sole point necessary being that no two should have the same level—the outline broken with loggias, balconies, projecting lines, quaint cupolas, and spires; the stream full below, reflecting every salient point, every window on the high perpendicular line, every cloud on the blue over-arching sky,—this fair conjunction gives, at the first glance, that gleam of color, light, sunshine and warmth which is conventionally necessary to an Italian town—the sunny south, as we all say with indiscriminate fervor.

But there are many days in which Florence reminds the spectator of everything in the world rather than the sunny south; and neither the mind of her people nor the architecture of her streets is of a light description.
Dante, Machiavelli, Savonarola, Michael Angelo, are names that give the mind no superficial sensation of pleasantness, but represent to us perhaps the most serious men who have figured on earth—men of certain mountainous vastness and grandeur; with great light sometimes dwelling on their heads, but still otherwise wrapped in great glooms, absorbed in contemplation of the saddest side of nature, their heads striking the stars, their souls engrossed with high questions and problems such as have no easy solution.

We have placed among these a name which the reader may think too highly honored; but the cynic philosopher and statesman is as characteristic of the people as the great poet, the great preacher, the great painter, all tolling in sorrow and pity and wrath between a sublime God and a miserable world lost in wickedness.
Serious as death and life can make them are these great spirits, called gloomy by superficial spectators who cannot see beneath the gloom the pathetic humanity, the love and yearning wildness, and so are their houses serious—great walls, half fortress, half prison, with deep, projecting Tuscan roofs, which, like a broad hat, over a fair brow, veil the countenance of the city, so to speak, and convey to us a perpetual impression of brooding solemnity, if not of complot and conspiracy. The churches, except, perhaps, the warm, familiar, contained elegance of the Annunziata, are, like the city, solemn, with a dim greatness of half-light which adds to their size and effect, but somewhat chills the eye accustomed to Gothic variety of light and shade.—Blackwood's Mag.

Three Chicago girls are about opening a barber's shop in that city. One is to do the lathering, another the shaving, while the third, a beautiful blonde, is to sit on a sort of throne and play on a harp and sing. The outfit of this establishment, it is said, will cost $12,000.

SIMMONS' TALKER LIVER REGULATOR

The Symptoms of Liver Complaint are unpleasant and pain in the side. Sometimes the pain is in the shoulder, and is mistaken for rheumatism.
The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness, bowels in general constive, sometimes alternating with lax. The head is troubled with pain, and dull, heavy sensation, considerable loss of memory, accompanied with painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. Often complaining of weakness, debility, and low spirits. Sometimes many of the above symptoms attend the disease, and at other times very few of them; but the Liver is generally the organ most involved.
